Abstract. The article analyses the right to housing in the context of the European Social Charter and the jurisprudence of its monitoring institution the European Committee of Social Rights. The Committee has developed the meaning, scope and content of this right and clarified the nature and extent of the State obligations in a number of its Conclusions adopted in the national reports and Decisions on Collective Complaints. The article focuses on recent Conclusions on Housing Rights of 2011, which revealed the lack of the States Parties to comply with the obligations emerging from the European Social Charter. The enforcement of the housing rights in Lithuania is discussed and the most problematic issues are disclosed on the basis of the Conclusions of the Committee.

Keywords: right to housing, European Social Charter, European Committee of Social Rights.
Introduction

The right to housing is no doubt one of the most crucial social rights closely connected to the right to life and other civil, political and economic, social rights and freedoms. The right to housing secures social inclusion and integration of individuals into society and contributes to the abolishment of socio-economic inequalities. The right to housing is guaranteed by various international and regional instruments mostly as a part of other rights, for instance, right to an adequate standard of living; right to respect for private and family life, etc. Revised European Social Charter (hereinafter – Revised Charter) is the only one instrument which contains provisions that are directly related to the housing rights, i.e. Article 31 is intended to protect the right to housing. Although the original European Social Charter of 1961 (hereinafter – Charter) does not contain the direct provision, its Article 16 addresses housing in the context of securing the right of families to social, legal and economic protection.

The European Committee of Social Rights (hereinafter – Committee) as the body entrusted with supervising implementation of both Charters in its case law has developed the meaning, scope and content of the right to housing and clarified the nature and extent of the State obligations. The recent Conclusions on the national reports disclosed that almost all of still rather few countries, having accepted the provisions of the right to housing, were found to have problems with aspects of its application. On the whole, the sub-standard housing conditions of many Roma and their forced evictions were one of the main recurring issues in the last year’s Conclusions. But recent Collective complaints raised new problematic issues of the right to housing related to the application of this right to other vulnerable groups such as children, elderly people and disabled persons.

Therefore, the goal of the article is to analyse the right to housing in the context of the European Social Charter and the case law of the European Committee of Social Rights. The author discusses the main aspects related to the goal and content of the housing rights, the meaning of the adequacy and forced evictions and the extent and nature of the States obligations. The last part focuses on the situation in Lithuania and discloses the most problematic issues related to the application of the right to housing.

3 Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights.
1. The Scope and Content of the Right to Housing

Significant references to the right to housing are set out in Article 31 of the Revised European Social Charter:

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to housing, the Parties undertake to take measures designed:

1. to promote access to housing of an adequate standard;
2. to prevent and reduce homelessness with a view to its gradual elimination;
3. to make the price of housing accessible to those without adequate resources.

The interpretation of the right to housing was carried out in the case-law of the European Committee of Social Rights. In a number of Conclusions adopted after the examination of the national reports from States\(^7\) and Decisions on Collective Complaints\(^8\) the Committee gives explanations on the scope, content, and meaning of the housing rights and elaborates the extent of the States’ obligations.

The Committee agrees that the actual wording of Article 31 of the Charter cannot be interpreted as imposing on states an obligation of “results”. However, it notes that the rights recognised in the Social Charter must take a practical and effective, rather than purely theoretical, form\(^9\). The Committee considered that the effective enjoyment of certain fundamental rights requires a positive intervention by the state: the state must take the legal and practical measures which are necessary and adequate to the goal of the effective protection of the right to housing\(^10\).

This means that, for the situation to be in conformity with the Treaty, the State party must:

a. adopt the necessary legal, financial and operational means of ensuring steady progress towards achieving the goals laid down by the Charter;

b. maintain meaningful statistics on needs, resources and results;

c. undertake regular reviews of the impact of the strategies adopted;

d. establish a timetable and not defer indefinitely the deadline for achieving the objectives of each stage;

e. pay close attention to the impact of the adopted policies on each of the categories of persons concerned, particularly the most vulnerable11.

However, following the case law of the European Court of Human Rights (hereinafter – ECtHR), the Committee acknowledged a margin of appreciation of the States in determining the steps to be taken to ensure compliance with the Charter, in particular as regards the balance to be struck between the general interest and the interest of a specific group and the choices which must be made in terms of priorities and resources. Nonetheless, “when the achievement of one of the rights in question is exceptionally complex and particularly expensive to resolve, a State Party must take measures that allows it to achieve the objectives of the Charter within a reasonable time, with measurable progress and to an extent consistent with the maximum use of available resources”12. For instance, Article 31§2 (Prevention and Reduction of Homelessness) obliges Parties to gradually reduce homelessness with a view of its elimination.

The general article on housing rights was included only in the Revised Charter, but not all States are parties to this Charter, to date still 11 States are parties to the 1961 Charter13. Moreover, not all States parties to the Revised Charter have accepted the provisions of Article 3114. Therefore, it is significant that the Committee had held that Articles 1615 (which could be found in both Charters) and 31 overlap: “The Committee considers that, as many other provisions of the Charter, Articles 16 and 31, though different in personal and material scope, partially overlap with respect to several aspects of the right to housing. In this respect, the notions of adequate housing and forced eviction are identical under Articles 16 and 31”16.

Further, the Committee considered that the fact that the right to housing is stipulated under Article 31 of the Charter, does not preclude a consideration of relevant housing issues arising under Article 16 which addresses housing in the context of securing the right of families to social, legal and economic protection. In this context and with respect to families, Article 16 focuses on the right of families to an adequate supply of housing, on the prerequisite to take into account their needs in framing and implementing housing policies and ensuring that existing housing be of an adequate standard and include essential services.\textsuperscript{17}

Apart from the above mentioned Articles, the European Social Charter also contains rights to housing in relation to:

- Physically and mentally disabled persons.\textsuperscript{18} The Committee concluded that all newly constructed or renovated public buildings, facilities and buildings open to the public and cultural and leisure activities should be physically accessible. The needs of persons with disabilities must be taken into account in housing policies, including the construction of an adequate supply of suitable, public, social or private, housing. Further, financial assistance should be provided for the adaptation of existing housing\textsuperscript{19}.

- Children and young persons.\textsuperscript{20} The Committee emphasised the importance of the interests of children. Therefore, “children placed in institutions are entitled to the highest degree of satisfaction of their emotional needs and physical well being as well as to a special protection and assistance. \textless ...\textgreater A unit in a child welfare institution should be of such a size as to resemble home environment and should not therefore accommodate more than 10 children”\textsuperscript{21}.

- Migrant workers.\textsuperscript{22} The Committee reiterated the need to eliminate all legal and \textit{de facto} discrimination concerning access to public and private housing to migrant workers (home-buying\textsuperscript{23}, access to subsidised housing or housing aids, such as loans or other allowances\textsuperscript{24}).

- Elderly persons.\textsuperscript{25} The Committee highlighted the significance of the housing rights to the elderly persons and specified that the supply of adequate housing

Policies should help elderly persons to remain in their own homes for as long as possible through the provision of sheltered/supported housing and assistance for the adaptation of homes.

Article 30 on rights to protection against poverty and social exclusion also includes an obligation on contracting states to promote effective access to, inter alia, housing. The Committee pointed out that housing is a critical policy area in fighting poverty and social exclusion. Article 30 requires States Parties to adopt positive measures for groups generally recognised as excluded or disadvantaged, such as Roma, to ensure that they are able to access rights such as housing, which in turn will have an impact on access to other rights such as education, employment and health.

The Committee emphasised the importance of other international human rights documents in the interpretation of housing rights and acknowledged that Article 31 must be considered in the light of relevant international instruments that served as inspiration for its authors or in conjunction with which it needs to be applied. This applies above all to the European Convention on Human Rights (hereinafter - ECHR). The Committee is particularly concerned that its interpretation of Article 31 is fully in line with the European Court of Human Rights’ interpretation of the relevant provisions of the Convention. The jurisprudence of the Committee regarding housing rights has been notable for its reference to Article 8 of the ECHR and the judicial statements of the ECtHR. In some decisions, the Committee draws the practical consequences of the general principals adopted by the ECtHR. But it should be noted that the Charter does not guarantee the same rights as they are protected by the ECHR. For instance, the Committee emphasised that the right to housing under the Charter “does not directly concern a specific right to ownership of a specific piece of property, nor a right to enjoy property such as analogous to that contained in Article 1 of the First Protocol of the ECHR. <...> does not therefore require a state to provide full and complete restitution for the unjustified deprivation of property rights.32

Moreover, the Committee attaches great importance to the materials on the protection of housing rights gathered by other international bodies. Information disclosing the situation in the State which could be found in various reports of regional and international institutions serves as evidence in the adoption of decisions by the Committee33.

2. Adequate Living Conditions

The Committee in its case law developed the requirements for the adequate housing and requested States to define the notion of adequate housing in national law. The Committee considers that “adequate housing” means34:

- a dwelling which is safe from a sanitary and health point of view, i.e. possesses all basic amenities, such as water, heating, waste disposal; sanitation facilities; electricity etc; and if specific dangers such as, for example, the presence of lead or asbestos materials are under control.
- a dwelling which is not over-crowded (over-crowding means that the size of the dwelling is not suitable in light of the number of persons in residence and the composition of the household).
- security of tenure is guaranteed, this means protection from forced eviction and other threats.35

The Committee underlines that in order to meet the criteria of adequacy, a dwelling must provide occupants with adequate space and protect them from harsh weather conditions or other threats to health. It must also be structurally secure to ensure the physical safety of occupants36. Adequate housing must be in a location which allows access to public services, employment, health-care services, schools and other social facilities. States should be vigilant when implementing housing policies so as to prevent spatial or social segregation of ethnic minorities or immigrants37. The Committee emphasised that living in segregated settings means that there will be inadequate access Greece, Complaint No. 49/2008, Decision on the merits of 11 December 2009, paras. 39, etc.

34 For comparison, see the General Comment 4 of the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, where the criteria for the “adequate housing” were developed. The criteria include: (a) Legal security of tenure; (b) Availability of services, materials, facilities and infrastructure; (c) Affordability; (d) Habitability; (e) Accessibility; (f) Location; (g) Cultural adequacy. to schooling, fewer opportunities for employment or more difficult access to medical facilities. Likewise, inadequate standards of housing lead to poor health and higher incidences of diseases\(^{38}\).

In its recent case law the Committee explicited the new aspect of adequate housing – cultural adequacy. The Committee held that social housing offered to Roma should be, as far as possible, culturally suited to them. Re-housing of Roma families in apartment blocks has often prevented family and casual gatherings, given that their means of existence as a community and bonds of solidarity are broken. Moreover, they are also faced with hostile attitudes of neighbours in apartment blocks\(^{39}\).

According to the Committee, the standards of adequate housing shall be applied not only to new constructions, but also gradually, in the case of renovation, to the existing housing stock. They shall also be applied to both housing available for rent as well as to housing occupied by their owners\(^{40}\). The temporary supply of shelter cannot be considered as adequate and individuals should be provided with adequate housing within a reasonable period\(^{41}\).

The requirements of adequate housing should be applied not only to the dwellings, but to the caravans and stopping places for the Travellers as well. In the Committee’s view, “any place in which a family resides legally or illegally, whether a building or a movable piece of property such as a caravan, must be regarded as housing within the meaning of the Charter. By extension, \(<...>\) the site on which the caravan is installed must also be considered to form part of the dwelling”\(^{42}\). The Committee stated that the feature which undoubtedly makes Traveller families completely different where housing is concerned is their caravan lifestyle. This situation calls for differentiated treatment for these families and tailored measures to improve their housing conditions\(^{43}\). This means that public sites for Travellers must be properly fitted out with the basic amenities necessary for a decent life, such as water, waste disposal, sanitation facilities, electricity, and must be structurally secure, not overcrowded and with secure tenure supported by law\(^{44}\).

The analysis of the national reports in 2011 disclosed the lack of the follow-up by States after the Decisions on Collective Complaints. This is notably the case with respect to the right to adequate housing under Article 31\(\S\)1, where the Committee reiterated its findings in several collective complaints that in some countries a large number of dwellings is sub-standard, lacking suitable amenities (are without reliable access to water or electricity or are unsafe or unhealthy), and, in particular, that there had been insufficient progress as regards the eradication of sub-standard housing conditions for a large number of Roma. Despite certain progress achieved by some States in ameliorating the living conditions of Roma, the Committee found violations of the rights to housing in cases where the significant number of Roma continue to live in conditions that fail to meet minimal standards. Although the Committee recognises that the effective implementation of the right to housing may require time, it also finds that given the urgency of the housing situation of Roma families a time frame should not be too long (for instance, the period of six years was acknowledged sufficient to realise significant improvements).

3. Forced Evictions

Eviction may be defined as the deprivation of housing which a person occupied, on account of insolvency or wrongful occupation. The Committee pointed out that States must put in place procedures to limit the risk of evictions and to ensure that, when these do take place, evictions must be:

- carried out under conditions which respect the dignity of the persons concerned;
- governed by rules of procedure sufficiently protective of the rights of the persons;
- accompanied by proposals for alternative accommodation.

To comply with the Charter, legal protection for persons threatened by eviction must be prescribed by the law and include:

- an obligation to consult the affected parties in order to find alternative solutions to eviction;
- an obligation to fix a reasonable notice period before eviction;
- a prohibition to carry out evictions at night or during winter;
- accessibility to legal remedies;
- accessibility to legal aid;
- a compensation for illegal evictions.

The Committee notes that “illegal occupation of a site or dwelling may justify the eviction of the illegal occupants. However, the criteria of illegal occupation must not be unduly wide, the eviction should take place in accordance with the applicable rules of procedure and these should be sufficiently protective of the rights of the persons concerned.”

Greece*, supra note 33, paras. 38–39; *European Federation of National Organisations working with the Homeless (FEANTSA) v. may be required by States, however, the eviction from shelter of such persons should be banned as it would place the persons concerned in a situation of extreme helplessness which is contrary to the respect for their human dignity\footnote{Defence for Children International (DCI) v. the Netherlands, Complaint No. 47/2008, Decision on the merits of 20 October 2009, para. 63.}. And even when an eviction is justified by the public interest, authorities must adopt measures to re-house or financially assist the persons concerned\footnote{International Movement ATD Fourth World v. France, supra note 11, paras. 77–78.}.

The destruction of housing or forced evacuation of villages violates the right to housing and in that situation, States must provide effective remedies to the victims\footnote{Conclusions XIII-3, Turkey, p. 381–385.}, and must take measures in order to re-house families in decent accommodation or to provide financial assistance\footnote{Conclusions XIII-1, Turkey, p. 258–259.}. The Committee held that, the lack of protection and investigation measures in cases of generalized violence against Roma and Sinti sites, in which the alleged perpetrators are officials, implies for the authorities an aggravated responsibility\footnote{International Movement ATD Fourth World v. France, supra note 11, para. 75.}.

As mentioned above, the caravan and the site on which it is installed forms part of a Traveller family’s home. Therefore, all entries onto a site for the purposes of an eviction must be regarded as an entry into the occupant’s home and must comply with the rules concerning eviction from a home\footnote{International Federation of Human Rights (FIDH) v. Belgium, supra note 42, para. 162.}. The Committee held that “urging Traveller families to leave sites on which they have settled – even illegally – and then, even though there are not enough legal sites, evicting them if they refuse to comply without proposing a suitable long-term alternative accommodation, adds to the failure to respect these families’ right to housing”\footnote{Ibid., para. 165.}.

Special attention should be paid to the case against France concerning the forced evictions of Roma of Romanian and Bulgarian origin in the summer of 2010. Apart from the breach of the above mentioned requirements for the procedure of evictions, the Committee pointed out that adopted measures, which are incompatible with human dignity and specifically aimed at vulnerable groups, and the active role of the public authorities in framing and implementing this discriminatory approach to security, constitute “an aggravated violation of human rights from the standpoint of Article 31\S\ of the Revised Charter”\footnote{Centre on Housing Rights and Evictions (COHRE) v. France, Complaint No. 63/2010, Decision on the merits of 28 June 2011, paras. 47, 53–55.}.

The Conclusions of the Committee on national reports in 2011 indicated that in some countries evictions of Roma and Sinti continue to be carried out without the necessary procedural safeguards and without proper re-housing solutions\footnote{For example, see: Conclusions 2011, Italy, Article 31; Conclusions 2011, Bulgaria, Article 31; Conclusions 2011, France, Article 31, etc.}.

\footnote{60}{For example, see: Conclusions 2011, Italy, Article 31; Conclusions 2011, Bulgaria, Article 31; Conclusions 2011, France, Article 31, etc.}
4. The Shortage of Affordable Housing

Article 31§3 of the Revised Charter requests States parties to make the price of housing accessible to those without adequate resources. The Committee held that an adequate supply of affordable housing must be ensured for persons with limited resources. Housing is affordable if the household can afford to pay initial costs (deposit, advance rent), current rent and/or other housing-related costs (e.g. utility, maintenance and management charges) on a long-term basis while still being able to maintain a minimum standard of living, according to the standards defined by the society in which the household is located61.

The Committee in its case law disclosed the obligations of the States:
- States Parties are required to adopt comprehensive housing benefit systems to protect low-income and disadvantaged sections of the population62.
- States Parties must adopt appropriate measures to encourage the construction of housing, in particular social housing63. Furthermore, they must ensure access to social housing for disadvantaged groups, including equal access for nationals of other Parties to the Charter lawful residents or regularly working on their territory64.
- States Parties should adopt measures to ensure that waiting periods for the allocation of housing are not excessive; legal and non-legal remedies must be available when waiting periods are excessive65.

All the rights thus provided must be guaranteed without discrimination, in particular as in respect of Roma or Travellers66. It could be noted that the Committee had led to conclusions of non-conformity with the provisions on affordable housing, whereas a significant shortage of social housing in some countries and the lack of equal treatment of foreigners in respect of social housing and access to housing benefits67.

5. Enforcement of the Right to Housing in Lithuania

Lithuania has ratified the Revised European Social Charter on 29 June 2001. It has accepted 86 of the 98 paragraphs of the Revised Charter, including paragraphs 1 and 2 of the Article 31 (Right to housing)68. Unfortunately Lithuania has not yet signed or ratified 63 Ibid., p. 656.

64 European Roma Rights Center (ERRC) v. Italy, supra note 1.

67 For example, see: Conclusions 2011, Finland, Article 31§3; Conclusions 2011, Slovenia, Article 31§3; Conclusions 2011, Turkey, Article 31§3, etc.
the Additional Protocol providing for a system of collective complaints, therefore, the national reports of Lithuania and Conclusions of the Committee regarding the housing rights will be analysed in this chapter. To date Lithuania has submitted two reports regarding the provisions of Article 31, the first one in 2004 and the second – in 2010. The Committee adopted Conclusions respectively in 2005 and 2011 taking note of the information contained in the reports submitted by Lithuania.

According to the Law on State Support for the Acquisition and Lease of Housing and Renovation (Modernisation) of Multi-Apartment Buildings “adequate housing” means a dwelling that is suitable for living for a person or a family, complies with the requirements of construction and special norms (sanitary, fire protection, etc.) and useful floor space per family member (i.e. more than 14 m²). The Committee considered that the requirements, as described in detail in the report, correspond to the criteria required for a dwelling to be structurally secure, safe from a sanitary point of view and not overcrowded. However, the Committee further noted that the report of Lithuania did not contain any statistics on adequacy of dwellings. Nor does it provide any information on resources invested to guarantee the right to adequate housing.

The Report 2010 does not include any information on the situation of Roma and Travellers. The Committee, however, considered from other sources that profound discrimination is faced by the Roma community, inter alia, in the field of access to housing. As a result of this discrimination, the Roma community lives in isolation, in ghetto-like neighbourhoods and their situation is critical as a result of their poor living and housing conditions.

It should be mentioned that the Government of Lithuania has adopted several action plans or programmes for the integration of Roma People into Lithuanian society. However, no substantial results have been achieved. The Programme 2000-2004 mentioned the poor housing situation of the Roma, but it proposed no solutions and ultimately had no impact on Roma housing situation in Lithuania. Although Programme 74 Conclusions 2011, Lithuania, p. 31.

2008-2010\textsuperscript{76} recognized Roma housing problem, it did not include particular measures to solve it. And the \textit{Action Plan 2012-2014}\textsuperscript{77} does not cover housing aspects of the Roma People at all and was criticized by the NGOs working in favour of Roma rights\textsuperscript{78}.

As Human Rights Monitoring Institute pointed out in its Alternative Report\textsuperscript{79}, the issue of Roma housing quality is most evident in the Kirtimai settlement in Vilnius, housing the largest numbers of the Roma. The settlement is located on state-owned land; therefore, Roma dwellings constructed in the settlement are considered illegal. Residents cannot register and legitimise their houses. All of them are registered under a single address (Dariaus ir Girėno str. 185). In Kirtimai, dwellings do not meet standards in terms of heating, outdoor toilets, water pumps and residents have limited access to public transportation.

The future of Kirtimai settlement remains vague. During last years, municipal politicians repeatedly called for the forceful relocation of the Roma from Kirtimai, however, no programme for solving the housing issue of the Roma residing in Kirtimai settlement was adopted\textsuperscript{80}. But some actions already took place. On 2-3 December 2004, Vilnius Municipality without court authorization demolished six houses in the Roma-inhabited ghetto situated in Kirtimai village. However, the Supreme Administrative Court of Lithuania stated that Vilnius Municipality carried out illegal activities and was responsible for the illegal abolition of houses\textsuperscript{81}. On 13 February 2012 the State Territorial Planning and Construction Inspectorate demolished 3 buildings in Kirtimai village. This time with the authorisation of the court, but still with doubts if the demolitions comply with the requirements of evictions.

The 4\textsuperscript{th} national report of Lithuania, provided statistics on the numbers of homeless persons: in 2001 there were 1,250 homeless persons, or 0.4\% of the population\textsuperscript{82}. The Committee highlighted that the Report 2010 did not contain updated figures or statistics concerning the number of homeless persons, nor does it refer to any specific emergency or longer term measure taken to combat homelessness during the reference period. It should be noted that Lithuania does not regularly collect data of homeless persons, but the 2011 Population and Housing Census should disclose the recent numbers of such persons (the official results of the census should be announced in 2013).

The Report 2010 outlines the procedures and rules governing entitlement to municipal as well as to rental subsidised housing, the aim of which is to help vulnerable categories of the population to enjoy effectively their right to housing. Meanwhile, the report lacks to respond to the Committee’s request for figures about the demand for social housing, the average waiting-time for being allocated social housing, the remedies available in the event of excessive waiting time and the rate of satisfaction ensured through the combined public and private social housing supply. It could be mentioned that Lithuanian Department of statistics noted the growth of number of persons applying for the rent of social housing. At the end of 2011 30,484 persons (families) were waiting for the allocation of social housing and this number is 7% higher in comparison with the statistics of 2010.

The Committee in 2011 concluded that the situation in Lithuania is not in conformity with Article 31§1 and 31§2 of the Charter on the grounds that:

- it has not been established that the right to adequate housing is effectively guaranteed;
- insufficient measures were taken by public authorities to improve the substandard housing conditions of most Roma in Lithuania;
- it has not been established that progress in reducing homelessness was achieved.

Therefore, national reports of Lithuania were not very informative and did not cover the most problematic aspects of the right to housing: renovation activities, homeless persons, social housing and the Roma People. The provided information disclosed gaps both in regulation and in enforcement of the right to housing.

Conclusions

1. Effective enjoyment of the right to housing requires a positive intervention by the state: the state must take the legal and practical measures which are necessary and adequate to the goal of the effective protection of the right to housing. However, the Charter leaves to the States margin of appreciation in determining the measures to be taken to fulfil their obligations under the European Social Charter.

2. “Adequate housing” means a dwelling which is sanitary (i.e. it possesses all the basic amenities, such as water, heating, waste disposal, sanitation facilities, electricity); structurally secure; not overcrowded and with secure tenure supported by law. The requirements of adequate housing should be applied not only to the dwellings, but to the caravans and stopping places for the Travellers as well.

3. States must put in place procedures to limit the risk of evictions and to ensure that they are justified and are carried out in conditions that respect the dignity of the persons concerned, and that alternative accommodation is available.

4. The recent Conclusions of the Committee on the right to housing disclosed the inefficiency of the States in application of this right. On the whole, the sub-standard housing conditions of many Roma and their forced evictions were one of the main recurring issues in the last year’s Conclusions.

5. The national reports of Lithuania lacked to respond to the Committee’s requests and to reveal the real situation regarding renovation activities, homeless persons, social housing and the Roma People. Because of all the gaps in the information supplied, the Committee was unable to assess the real situation of the housing rights in Lithuania. Therefore, the Government of Lithuania should consider the ratification of the Additional Protocol to the European Social Charter Providing for a System of Collective Complaints, that the Committee could assess the real situation of the application of the right to housing in Lithuania.

TEISĖ Į BŪSTĄ EUROPOS SOCIALINIŲ TEISIŲ KOMITETO JURISPRUDENCIJOJE

Dovilė Gailiūtė
Mykolo Romerio universitetas, Lietuva

Komitetas pabrėžė, kad valstybės, įgyvendindamos teisę į būstą, privalo imtis tam tikrų teisinių ir praktinių veiksmų, kurie padėtų tinkamai užtikrinti prisiimtus įsipareigojimus. Tačiau Komitetas taip pat pripažino valstybių diskrecijos laisvą pasirinkti, kokių konkrečių veiksmų ar priemonių ji imisi. Komitetas savo jurisprudencijoje pateikia „tinkamo būsto” išaiškinimą, numatydamas tokiam būstui keliamus kriterijus. Kad būstas būtų pripažintas tinkamu, jis turi atitikti higienos reikalavimus, t. y. turėti būtiniausius patogumus, t. kaip vanduo, elektra, šildymas, šiukšlių išvežimas, kanalizacija. Būstas taip pat turėtų būti struktūriškai saugus bei neperpildytas, o būsto valdymo teisės užtikrintos įstatymuose. Be to, pabrėžiama, kad tie patys reikalavimai taikomi ne tik namams, bet ir klajoklių karavanams bei jų stovėjimo aikštelėms, kadangi Komitetas ir tokias gyvenamąsias vietas yra pripažinę būstų.

Europos socialinių teisių komitetas Pataisytos chartijos 31 str. 2 d., numatančios valstybės pareigą mažinti benamystę, taiko ir draudimui neteisėtai iškeliant asmenis. Komitetas iškelinimą apibrėžė, kaip „būsto, kuriamo asmuo gyveno, atėmimas dėl nemokumo ar neteisėto užėmimo”. Komitetas taip pat išskyrė reikalavimus valstybėms, t. y. iškelinimai turėtų vykdomi nepažeidžiant asmenų orumo ir suteikiant alternatyvų būstą. Taip pat valstybės teisės aktuose turėtų būti iškelinimų procedūros: teisinė pagalba asmenims, kurieis gresia iškelinimas ar neteisėto užėmimo. Komitetas taip pat išskyrė reikalavimus valstybėms, t. y. iškelinimai turėtų tikėtis, kad jie atitiktų tikslius, nustatytus įstatymuose ir pagrįstas įsitikinimą, kad jie atitiktų teisinio žmogaus teisių sąvoką. Taip pat Komitetas nurodo, kad asmenys, kurie gali būti iškeliami, turėtų turėti teisę gauti teisės pagalba asmenims, kurie gėriausiai atveju gali būti iškeliami, taip pat, kad jie turėtų turėti teisę gauti alternatyvų būstą, jei jie gali būti iškeliami.
