The expression that 21st century belongs to Asia was founded on a purpose. Today this complex geopolitical entity whose axis is an East Asia region is becoming the centre of global economic and political power, which inevitably puts the attention of politicians and researchers around the world. Because of growing mutual interdependence in the globalized world it is extremely important to understand the main political, economic and cultural trends of the East Asia region.

What challenges for the region in terms of economic, political and social security we can expect in the near future? How does the changing security architecture of the region affect the development of the European Union and other Western countries? These and other questions will be raised in the final forum of the "Introductory Course to the East Asian Community: Cultural, Political and Economic Aspects" lectures series sponsored by One Asia Foundation.
