Sustainability is often understood as a meaningful coexistence of different lifestyles, activities and cultures for the success of the future. The future of the Lithuanian people and the Korean people is brought forward by a set of common institutional, governmental and political decisions of the Republic of Lithuania and the Republic of Korea. Sustainable future anticipation emerges as a model for a new, more refined and sustainable community lifestyle. Economics, science, culture and politics are increasingly emphasizing sustainability as a precondition for the future. Sustainability in various areas of existence of states and individuals: socio-economic, geo-political, and cultural-scientific is the topic of this 30th anniversary conference of diplomatic relations between the Republic of Lithuania and the Republic of Korea.
