Valencia. Definitely, I have chosen Spain because of the climate and laid-back culture. However, the Erasmus+ alumna to whom I talked before going to study at Valencia University was right – the studies are not easy there. Many papers to write and group works to do, and questions during the exam session were tricky, not to mention the strict evaluation. On the other hand, most professors are organized, with a clear study and reading plan provided on the first day of the course which enables you to easily catch up with the class or study on your own. They are also very helpful and want that students understand the subject. Moreover, the international environment definitely widens the worldview and expands the network. Isn't it cool to have a friend to visit and a place to stay for free in different countries? Funny enough, I met one more student from MRU (you can see us both in the picture)! Everyone who has at least a little thought about exchange studies should do it. It's an adventurous time with great support from our and receiving university when needed!
