

Living in a foreign country presents challenges, but it is essential for personal growth.

I had an exciting time with new friends and endless adventures filling my days. I made the decision to arrive in Croatia earlier in order to explore and become better acquainted with the country. The stunning beaches, picturesque mountains, and warm culture pleasantly surprised me. The locals were incredibly friendly and hospitable, creating a strong bond between me and the place. Living in a foreign country presents challenges, but it is essential for personal growth. Ultimately, after overcoming various hurdles, you find a sense of tranquility because everything appears different. I feel immensely grateful for the opportunities that the European Union provides to young people, and I highly recommend stepping out of your comfort zone and participating in an Erasmus project or exchange.

