

International Scientific and Practical Conference:

Human Rights Amidst Modern Challenges: the Ukrainian-Lithuanian Experience

The conference brings together scholars, practitioners, policymakers, legal professionals, students, and representatives of civil society to examine the complex consequences of war, geopolitical instability, and forced displacement, with particular attention to Ukraine and its wider regional context.

Its purpose is to foster interdisciplinary dialogue, exchange research-based knowledge and practical experience, and identify approaches that can strengthen societal resilience, protect human rights, and support inclusive recovery in communities affected by conflict and crisis.

The presentations address a broad range of economic, social, legal, security, and humanitarian issues, including national and community resilience, energy security, military expenditure and economic development, migration and refugee well-being, social inclusion, and the protection of vulnerable groups. The programme also explores legal and human rights challenges related to children affected by war, international child abduction, reproductive rights, minority-language education, and international humanitarian law, as well as civil defence, community preparedness, institutional responses to crisis, and the social and psychological consequences of armed conflict.

By combining academic research, legal analysis, public policy perspectives, and practical experience, the conference provides a platform for meaningful discussion and knowledge exchange among participants interested in security, human rights, social resilience, recovery, and sustainable development in times of crisis.
